Advanced Practice Work Stream

Timeline to development

Advanced Practice Work stream

The Standards outline the minimum knowledge, skills and behaviours required of all clinicians working at advanced practice level in the UK within the MSK specialty, across professions and sub-specialties. They are designed to inform and underpin the development and delivery of MSK advanced practice education and training programmes and pathways across the UK.

The Standards were developed to support and promote advanced education and practice in MSK and to reduce unwarranted variation in education and practice across the regulated MSK professions and sub-specialties.

In so doing, their additional purpose is to enhance the quality of MSK care, uphold patient and clinician safety, and strengthen system-level leadership to benefit populations, patients and services.

QMUL: Benjamin Bowling and Jordan Smitham

Title:

The Patient and Clinician Perspectives of a Successful Musculoskeletal Pain Assessment: A Qualitative Study

Reason for Nomination:

This qualitative study has generated robust findings that MSK pain assessments, whether remote or face-to-face, and whether using analogue or digital pain mapping, require sophisticated verbal and non-verbal communication, the ability to build a strong rapport, understanding of specific pain characteristics, and being able to validate and explain the pain presentation. Importantly, semi-structured interviews were used with both patients' and clinicians' during and after the pandemic practice alterations to generate the data for a thorough thematic analysis. The study met its aims, has been presented at an international meeting, yielded an MSc distinction, and is being prepared for publication. As a dissemination aid, an infographic has been produced to display in physiotherapy clinics as an informative visual aid for both patients and clinicians.
